The "Cypria" or "Ekpyros" is the other half of the two-headed cyclic poem from "Purgatorio" that Dante presents in "Paradise". The "Cypria" means Cypris, or Aphrodite, or Eros. The Aphrodite used by Dante was a popular goddess of pagan times and was the "Cypria" of Christian times. The version of the Cypria presented here was translated by Thomas S. Noble. This version was edited by Charles S. Singleton and James I. Nelcyn. I have included references for each of the three versions.
